

ABSTRACT

5 The transgene-inserted replication-deficit adenoviral vector is effectively used in in vivo gene therapy for myocardial ischemia in a protective way, by a single intracoronary injection directly conducted deeply in the lumen of the coronary arteries in an amount sufficient for transfecting all cell types in the affected region, including cardiac myocytes.